What is the medium of publication in MLA citations? The medium of publication is not typically included in MLA citations. Instead, the focus is on the author(s), title of the work, and date of publication. MLA citations are primarily used for works written in English, and the citation format is designed to help readers locate and access the sources used in a work. If the medium of publication is stated in the source, it is sometimes included in parentheses after the title in the citation. However, this information is not universally required or consistent across all sources.

The format of the Works Cited section should be consistent and follow the MLA citation guidelines. It is important to accurately record the source of information to ensure that readers can verify the information and locate the original source. MLA citations are commonly used in academic writing to give credit to the creators of the works cited.
